I've learned a lot at my four years of college. A wise professor told me that you need history courses instead of just learning business courses like I had wanted. We want to make them learn several different fields of study. I love learning history, but to someone who doesn't they cannot respond with "there is not one era I want to learn from", this is bad for them. On that note, I can't believe that they are cutting history from colleges. Who would have thought we would have that discussion? Much of this book is about history you don't want to hear; I will warn you when it gets rough. You will put this book down at some point and walk outside, I did. Bear in mind faith is what keeps us on the earth, the more the knowledge the better.

If this isn't good enough, how many people say, "oh if only so and so left the country"? I know Paradise will be for everyone. This earth has seen everything, an example is that one of my college teach said the Indians were coming in to America to take over a local town and drive the people out, this would make anyone hate a group of people. Humans get upset at this, whereas I want to find out why this is happening like a new reason to hate more people, of course that is a hate worthy thing to do. People also want to be bad boys and gangsters; do you ever wonder why cannot throw all people in one side of the country who would hate me? I'm a rare person where someone says "why don't you leave this country"; I could end out leaving a country and liking it a lot more than America, everyday is a new circus it seems. Life is clearly a test; wouldn't everyone be in a Mosque if they felt welcome in the country they were in? We know why you left Islam. Anyone of knowledge could figure this out to make everyone like one another and be pleased with what they have. God will be pleasing everyone. We know for a fact that if a civil war broke out in America like in Syria, the country would collapse. Religious centers are the only thing that holds much of the world together if the rest of us are going to be viewed as inferiors or clowns of some kind. I interpret hadith's as whoever violates God's law goes to hell, if you want to show up to a Mosque, you get more in the Hereafter. After saying that, none of this is religious or knowledge based, it is all "opinion" oriented and can be debated. The irony is overwhelming where I would say "we surrender" if I were addressing Barack Obama, it may sound like that but the reality is there is nothing to surrender to, we are here to salvage the earth through knowledge is the truth. Don't ever think we are fighting people; let people think the way they want just ignore them, they are in their own worlds, not us. I believe once people's brains shut, that's it where they write things their own way becoming hypocrites in the process without recognizing it, if it upsets them having it done to them, then yes. I had a herniated disc and it had lasted since age 19 up until age 23, it was terrible but I was still able to pay attention in class thankfully, I was unable to hang out with friends or work a job, I had no clue what was physically wrong with me. Between that and me losing my job by way of yelling at a manager, I was allowed plenty of free time to research material that interested me most. This all started because I hated Barack Obama and his policies even he doesn't like. What I didn't understand in college is Barack isn't attacking me personally this is not true, I happen to be white or Christian at the time which he has attacked. Our brains can't understand this, it is ok for someone to cheer with him leaving office but to this point I don't care he doesn't know me nor is this directed just at me I'm not the only white person in America. It may have been my age, but does it seem anywhere near as bad if this were the truth of his intentions? I might be upset that he gives more of a platform to these people, but it is on to the next day. If this seems bad to me, every day I see things far worse. In college it was a choice, now it has to get me upset when now I truly don't care. Although he is going to Hell, I owe him something. I guess it is ok to hate him now; it's kind of hard to. To say it was anger and hatred is a complete lie; that was only half the story. It is true about the hatred I had towards Obama, but my ambitions were good at heart and I was always interested in others, you wouldn't quite understand. I read books; I would have if I were in jail for selling drugs which could have been me. I will always know this material. I did not publish this to condemn those who do not agree with me, but to explain how I view what can be improved on, there is many areas in this book and to explain my side of the story and to strengthen those who agree with me. I smile if only one person reads this and enjoys it. In some ways this book will better society, give this to those who want to read it, that is all I ask of you. One chapter read is enough for me to thank that person. I will always appreciate those who listen, I prefer not to debate the ones who disagree simply put; it wasn't meant to be for you and I to agree. We both agree on that. I need to point out that I talked to a professor who visited the Soviet Union; he concluded they wanted peace and not war. You will conclude if people are worth protecting or not. Though it may seem that people want to argue with you or impose something on you, I've concluded the opposite that the majority of people on this world are innocent. The fact will always be there, eight out of ten opinions on how to run America should be thrown out. I put this material after what was fact, so much of this receives "no, you're wrong" or they feel obligated to tell me the other side that I've already researched and concluded against. After the beginning material, this is all "politics" that is agreed upon, it is all categorized, I wrote this out so I don't have to again. In today's earth, I don't think people care to rebuttal; I don't even know what their opinion will be. It would probably be "belongs on fox news" to me that isn't even insulting but an error to group me in not understanding that what they are giving isn't thought provoking at all.

The reality is that environments play a big role in people here; everyone wants to fit in by some way. I was too polite for the real world; I was also the class clown in high school. I wasn't liked or disliked; I just did my own thing. By the time I was 19, I met people who were very friendly. It dawned on me that if you are honest and forthcoming, you will make friends. Throughout college, I was able to find several classmates who were kind. I've said this all along, so many people want to do the right thing; I appreciate them. At this age, if you tell me where you are from, I get a good sense if you are polite or not though an upwards of 40% of the adults here in Massachusetts are rude. For some reason the youth are very friendly.

I've met some people who think they are above everyone else by their looks alone both young men and women. They have good social skills, but then they are rude when you start a conversation, they either act as if you are arrogant or they try to find a reason as to how they are somehow better than you, I don't get it. I am the one person you do not want to debate or be sarcastic to; I will catch you very easily. One girl had this odd grin to her when she debated over a war with Russia, she lied to she and kept nodding her head. This is who she is, her parents taught her to lie. I later exposed her and her friend for not being Christian, they do not support Palestine. As you well know, many people are hiding in our religions, yet we cannot get across to those who listen to others. This may make you throw my book against the wall, but you already knew it.

They never taught us a world map in school nor did they teach us about America's allies. They also do not teach what too much corruption is. Politicians have to answer to the public, without the public, they are nothing. We should teach when people are lying and what tricks they will play to win public support. The goal is not to make our citizens angry at corruption, but watchful of it, that is how Egypt had collapsed. We have to protect our countries internally. I am aware that countries need to keep secrets from the public, that being said we want citizens who want to be engaged.

In my effort to tie this into politics, part of my criticism of others lie in the fact that people look for reasons not to like each other instead of accepting that it wasn't meant to be. I saw this with the election. Many people do not like Donald Trump, they go so far as to find out what to use as bait against him, but these people didn't like him to begin with. Also, why do others feeling inclined to convince me not to vote for him? I would vote for the Conservative candidate over the Democratic one by the way. I find it great that you are engaged, but the whole world will not change if your candidate doesn't win which we know will not happen. For Trump, it does not matter his previous record being a billionaire. We grade him based on his corruption index, leadership, and his ability to understand Conservatism. It bears no relevance how many businesses he's created have failed. They also make the mistake of arguing over which candidate has a higher level of corruption instead of why their candidate should be elected. They could research many of the programs Hilary Clinton had in store for America; they chose to argue with people instead. What they will discover is that more often than not, people vote with their paychecks. Do not feel shame for wanting a tax break. The main problem here is that many people feel like they have to win the minds of most Americans and that they must get their system in place. We will make friends with people who seem to agree on much of this material. I will gladly be friends with either Clinton or Trump supporters. I like who they are, I will not abandon them. If you are reading this, you know that no economic school of thought it is absolute theory, they would be wrong if they said Conservatism was the best system. We do not know the decibel needed in taxation for it to be absolute. This is not something to divide a country. However, Canada is divided. One third of the country wants to succeed and Canada will not allow for it. I stand firm that states should be allowed to leave the Union provided that they do not work with enemies abroad.

I realize at the UN many leaders call for how the world should work, did anyone bother to tell them to try letting the world figure itself out on its own? What if the world's vision differs from your own? I know some are doing this for support but still, we cannot respond back telling them how it should be, they will not listen. I am aware that this is me telling you what I feel is best for America's future; I am calling on America to become a Christian nation and to serve Christian interest. This means allowing for Church and State to be brought together. Our allies will be based on those who best serve Christians worldwide such as Palestine. Currently, the US government promotes free expression and secularism. Had America served Christianity given the resources America has, would America not be the number one country in the world? I will sign off on that. America is pushing towards the Weimar Republic; we can correct this with ease. Humanity will only tolerate so much from these people. Since America will never become a Christian nation, I can just walk away from the idea and wish the people who want to run it well. Nothing they can achieve will be better than Christianity.

I refuse to interfere with a country's affairs. Who are you to judge because of one or two practices that you and I don't agree with? What gave you the right to tell others what they can and cannot do? They are not part of the team; their path differs than ours, leave it at that. I have seen unity with my own eyes and I can tell you that America is nowhere near unified no matter what system of school they teach. These poor nations are trying, that is what matters most. America is losing, Russia is unified. Anytime a leader is imposed on us, we are certain it is a Masonic brother who is trying to control the population for their own gain. Freemasons can lie to defend one another much like cops. It doesn't matter how they brand it. Whoever wins the war or revolution controls the country. This is what had happened in the Soviet Union. Russia had lost at the expense of others, this resulted in generations of people who felt liberated given their higher living standards; people were inclined to support their empire. This is dangerous for a country like Syria where the next generation could end out hating their own neighbors, Bashar Al Assad has reflected on this by showing concern for the next generation of after effects from the Syrian War. The answers we are provided with are short and all want stability, if they thought this was obtainable by Bashar leaving, they would go along with it. Take for example Pakistan, I talked with someone who was from there and he said that it is a "war of words", both sides do not want conflict. There is a scene in the movie The Outsiders where Randy and Ponyboy talk to each other; they work out a deal to leave each other alone. I bring this up because everyone has a country they do not like. What is good is that we both care enough not to let it escalate, our ambitions are not bad, we both just wanted to resolve what we didn't accept, we were different. You are both mature, here is an example of someone who is not- I had a college teacher tell me to grab his credit card out of his hand (he's a millionaire) because I challenged his political views several times. He would get defensive and one time he got outraged. This isn't how people react, that's why I avoid conflicts any arguments on how countries are run. We are very lucky to have our own people, nobody is expected to be the exact same, there are countries in Africa that have laws that I do not agree with, I don't send them hate mail for it. You may not agree with it but their legislation came up with it. Upon reading this, it is now out of date. It is solely the religion they are against. One may think I am hypocritical because I use God as a way to disavow laws passed; this brings us to our point of what if God was gone? Generally you are viewed as "bigoted" or "oppressive".....do people not see where this could be headed? Think beyond good and evil, there is one or the other with us religious people being all or nothing.

They cannot keep spinning material, paying off bribes, lying to the public, shaming people, deceiving their own people, creating problems and providing their own solutions. There will be a Final Day I can confirm this as this will not end. For those who believe nukes will end us, no. No one will fire a nuke knowing their country will be destroyed as a result; this means there is a different way the world will end. You have to listen to the general public because they are telling you the truth though many within it may not be reasonable. You don't tell them how to think. What they do instead is try to make Islam crash, numbers will show that Palestine and all of the Middle East will not leave. If I'm trying to be non-bias as possible, everything they do seems to get deflected such as the Trump Muslim Ban on countries that were part of the Axis of Evil or have people hide in Islam. The people running this are getting the same results. What I have theorized is that the Western countries will get worse and become not religious, from that point it will be initiated.

They know we humans have our limits. I know these people will fail, I mean this humbly. I am not looking to judge them; the reality is that we are united and that we have the moral edge. Their rational is wrong; many of them say "why do you care about others?" not sarcastically but to try to say "they aren't our responsibility, they don't surrender", that is not how life works. We are taught to love Thy Neighbor as Oneself. They are fighting with a law written by God himself. Of course we are going to care for other Christians, they help build our communities. How can someone be expected to fight us with tanks when Christians keep reproducing? It's no surprise that when the Roman Senate had read the Holy Bible, they said "no, we are not having this" knowing that their empire would collapse and it did. God won that battle similar to the Soviet Union going bankrupt but none of their leaders had listened when Christians had warned them, whose angry now? It seems the sword Jesus had provided his previous followers with was stronger than both of those empires. If any doubt in your mind that God will always win, there are endless victories throughout history that's why I know part of Europe will collapse someday. Get ready to hear a truth to life, they weren't targeting Christians, they were targeting the Holy Bible itself. They couldn't care less about Christians, they knew the Christians had to be suppressed and had to submit to the state for it their empire to last. It was never about Christians for the fact that they listened to the Messiah instead. Somebody somewhere is fighting God, we know this they know every trick, these sick individuals called themselves "the liberators" it all makes sense why they targeted Churches yet I had thought they hated Churches (some from within their movement did). This is the truth; the Soviet Union would have Churches everywhere if they thought their movement was stronger than Christianity. God always wins; last I checked "liberators" do not lock people down in a country. I wouldn't do that to someone yet these people would. Believe me when I say, foreign invaders read the Holy Bible and the Quran. They still feel ready to declare war on us based on their militaries and their trainings. In the book 1984, it shows where the Allies would have won the entire world except for the Arab World. They came very close but thanks to revolutions in the Arab World, it could not be done, it is is stalling at this point, they might be furious for all we know. Where we are at now is consistent questioning of the Holy Bible and Quran. Verses are shown and questions emerge over "radical Islamic terrorists" or taking over the West. This supposed threat contains abusing women, hating Jews, hatred of non-Muslims, persecuting Christians, sexual slavery, targeting your teenage daughters for marriage, jihad on infidels, lack of freedom of thought the list goes on. Sadly, you had no clue of what a Muslim was before 1970. It's not me they want you to hate, it's the Quran. Why is it important to bring up? The Quran speaks of the Psalms found in the Old Testament; I can't impose Sharia Law on you. The Psalms are explicitly against scheming.

If that isn't sad enough, we could pull the same stunt with Atheists by claiming they are trying to impose communism on us. If by any indication, it is me not them that is the problem. Sure, I can be Islamic so long as I abide by their standards it is as simple as don't be against them and let them do what they want. If we are counting the Middle East, that is well over 100 million people who want nothing more than to live in peace. As we can see, these are conflicting religious beliefs with Islam being the enemy. One final note is that they offer what we think is Christianity to the general public. It is not Christianity for two reasons, number one it is tolerant of all cultures (or rather others faiths) and number two is they don't pray daily. The second point is especially important because most Christians do not emulate verses from the Bible such as do to others as you would have them done to you nor do they go to Church at all. This leads to no progress whatsoever in each individual. God will not help those who do not help his cause. If this sounds direct, they are baptized, they have to learn quickly or suffer an awful life. This is added with the fact that the education system do not teach ethics or manners, they will pick up bad habits from their friends. Many are incapable of critical thinking in every country or geography, though it isn't necessary; I figured why not would put it in?

We have gone from empire divides, country border disputes, economic divides, and now we are at religious divides. What they still do not realize is that we will tell them "everything is under control". No matter how bad it looks, the Nile to the Euphrates is far more difficult to achieve than for us to sit tight. If you notice, these wars are low scale. Yes, they do have weapons, numbers, NATO. However, they also had the Soviet Union and America, they couldn't get it done. Either they are convinced that wars are won by numbers or they cannot realize that they cannot win all of these wars. Look at Afghanistan; same with the Soviet Union, the circus cannot go on forever. We can tell when a country is dysfunctional and is waiting to collapse. The Taliban want to die, these are not people you want to go to war with. Soldiers like these multiply; eventually the Taliban will win which means the entire war was for nothing, this extends the Syria. It doesn't matter what division there is or what weapons the enemy has. God will bring soldiers in that will not quit; this is something you don't win. These people know that God will keep our families safe here and hereafter. The only way you could possibly come close to winning is to ban the Quran. Forget rewriting and suppressing the past, you would have to reengineer the youth which they cannot do since these people love their country. Saying that you will "keep the world safe" is never good enough especially when they will execute in their way that are "concealing" past artifacts that these leaders may or may not hand over. You are asking the wrong person if these hidden artifacts must be kept away from their hands. I am truly not that high up to know what the Chalice at the last Supper can do for someone. We know that they cannot have the Scrolls of Abraham. As expressed in a separate book, know that they are hiding a lot of past history from you to get you to dispute the accounts of the Holy Bible for instance.

While it is true that they can have the country run religion be it freemasonry or communism, it won't last. If socialism can collapse, racking on debt for wars, dividing people, having citizens load up on debt can also cause America to collapse though I doubt it will before the Final Fight. Some of these European countries will collapse before then, that is a guarantee; I would gladly bet my entire bank account on it. They are smart enough to know not to execute people (at all, I was referencing masses), but what they are not smart enough about is that they cannot pass whatever laws they want and expect the public to go along with it. This is why I know Turkey will collapse, I am aware it is because of debt, but what is being imposed on them being the dominant "Muslim Brotherhood" will only hasten it up. They are telling specifically their youth how to think. No wonder why Jesus said "you call me teacher and Lord rightly so because that is what I am", EVERYONE has a teacher of some sort. I am also telling the reader how to think, if this isn't convincing enough, I lost on you. You don't have to view these people as your enemy; you can abide by their laws. I am directly telling you to oppose them. If you really were upset at Christians for the death toll, you are automatically siding with someone else or you are convinced that humans can be given the truths to life and figure everything out on their own with little to no wars not understanding the progress that has come such as the Industrial Revolution.

I also mentioned how those who rebel cannot lie to the public; the information is out there even if it is a small amount of evidence this will turn people against them. They will not air a historical movie that gives America a bad review. Also, George Bush II never lied when asked if he was targeting Osama Bin Laden in Afghanistan, he responded with "truly I'm not concerned about Bin Laden" but we were told on the TV that the US government was targeting Osama since day one. What were they doing in Afghanistan? You cannot lie to keep America safe; it doesn't work that way when you are invading a foreign country. I know this will happen; many Americans will come up with excuses to go off to war in Lebanon as if they can see into the future. The weapons they have are not strong enough to invade a foreign country, we will know who wants war between America and Russia; unfortunately we are entering another Cold War and that only unifies countries further. In theory if Russia supports Lebanon and America wants to invade Lebanon, that won't end well. This is why having other countries get involved never ends well; there will be plenty of Lebanese citizens who do not trust Russia. The division in that country is like none other. They send people off to countries that they know nothing about. How serious for me to reflect on that there was no vote on who to attack, you know nothing about the people of Lebanon; it shows you that this isn't something to be celebrated. US troops can get betrayed for money. Also, people will give them looks when the troops say that they hate their religion. You can't form allies that way, traitors will join along. I'm not sure where to put this George Bush claimed he talked to God; that would mean he is a Prophet. What Churches accept him as one? If American Christians can overlook that, they probably also missed him adding water boarding as a method of interrogation.

Wikipedia does this too where they only give you so much information to work with or they use images to make the general public vote a certain way, they also explain people in their own viewpoint. They will tell you about Mahmoud Ahmadinejad’s corruption whether true or not and if it is serious or light it matters not. They did not tell you about Barack Obama's involvement in Fast and Furious, this is a cover up on their part. As part of Eric Holder's (Obama's attorney general) Wikipedia page, they provide two sentences that will link you on to what they refer to this event as the "ATF gunwalking scandal". Now, we the public do not know for certain if Barack Obama gave him the orders to do so or if Obama was approached about it. They won't even address it on Obama's page with their own evidence to clear his name of any wrongdoing. Since they didn't put it on his page, I am certain he is behind it, you see what happens? This is the same guy who said he gets his news from the TV when asked about the IRS Scandal because it targeted the Tea Party members; this guy will lie to you about anything. I don't know why I am laughing about it. It must be because it makes you wonder what buttons he would push if given the chance, this looks awful for America's image, no apology at all to the public. The apology should be coming from the IRS agents who took advantage of the situation; Obama already gets the hate that he wanted, these people never make the phone calls. Finally, Iran was told by George Bush that Iran was the leader in state sponsored terrorism which is not in any way truthful. If ever a claim that America is the best nation on earth, here is your proof that it is not. Money does not define a nation.

Since we are never going to be able to ship the rich out of the country, I found a method that works. We should send their rich kids overseas since they nothing and just sit around being rich. I hate when people say "it is a free country." I have nothing wrong with someone who worked their asses off, is rich, and is now retired in their 40s. I would just much rather we not have any inheritance at all or just ban their 20 year olds and move them to London instead of have them here where they do nothing at all while they bid up home prices. Vancouver knows these people best. I shouldn't have to see those people if I'm commuting to Luanda for work every day. If they get their parents businesses, than these businesses will be poorly run, it reflects badly on the workers at the bottom of the company. It is a slap in the face for the people of Luanda because their government lies to them about how they run a "socialist" system. The beauty of India is that you are nowhere near the rich people.

I just realized that I'm not part of the country and am unable to vote. Your boss plays a larger role in your career than politics. It's true that the candidates, jobs, schools, workplaces, cliques, sports teams, and wealth are largely but not entirely responsible for the people around you, but I'm not disagreeing with that. I agree that 80% or more don't see past it. Even if taxes went up or down slightly, I don't think that's worth getting mad at one candidate, both aren't offering radical change. Reagan said that we go up or down when it comes to our wages/jobs here but again, there's not enough at stake here to even care. It's not like you wake up one day and you see the majority of leaving their desk jobs for construction work. I've already proven that the foreign policy will not change because of the constitution in place here and there is not much social change to be made, the country still accepts legal and illegal immigrants in the masses. Telling me to get mad over slight issues like college cost, I have to worry about myself first. Plus you're talking to the wrong person; I want to end college for most people. It's like why should I care about your college cost? I don't even watch the news here; my sources are from Iran and Syria. The environment around me is cheap so I will be cheap as well, I will buy the affordable products on the shelves because you haven't explained to me why I need a brand new car for example. Don't sit there and tell me that it is a goal to dress a certain way, I'm poor and I know it. Only poor people get to be poor, don't tell me that being middle class is somehow better when there are too many that are concerned with your private life in the middle class. I don't represent that in any way shape or form. Isn't it funny these same people expect me to follow elections? As if anyone became smarter watching a debate on material you already knew on a candidate.

They had a vision for the world, that's why the Ottoman Empire attacked Christians. If we didn't have arms, they would storm right in. They did what they thought was best for Sunni Islam. Sunni Islam like Protestant Christianity is bigger than any country or empire. Our vision differed, don't resent them for it. Abdul Hamid II did everything he could to keep their empire intact. The Christians would do the same so claiming an Islamic invasion isn't correct, we either condemn both sides or in my case neither.

These people would invade Libya today and save the country for its own good, it is right to go to war in a country that needs the help as long as it works. Once the country is able to put up a fight, they would stop and let an independent Libya be created with what land they didn't capture. There's such a thing as an invasion for good. I don't look to judge them if they took the whole country because I am a nationalist unless if the country cannot be partly salvaged, I completely understand the perspective they come from because it is for good.

All companies such as Fox News and The Washington Post don't list or mutually as a company agree on what causes are most important. Only one country I know is so blatant, can you guess who? America's number one enemy, Iran! This is important because China can start a low scale war in under a week and sweep it under the rug because they have new material for you to care about. They can stall the economy after all; they could talk about this issue nonstop to where you have to shut off the TV. So while you yell "corporate media" and someone else says "government run media" you didn't even think about how necessary it is for a law for left wing-right wing whatever to be required to tell you their top five issues are, this is to help you! Back in the 70's, they only gave you the news and there was a column in the papers with opinions, these opinions were to educate you on why there was disagreement that is why they had them there and it was barely anything now you know why. Also, it is physically impossible both agree and disagree with an issue like "temporary ban on all Muslims" if there was such a way we could do both options, they would do it I know it. Now we are grouping parties on issues so if I vote Trump the first question I get asked is "so you don't like Muslims?" It is ok to be "pro cops" but it's not ok to act like there is a crisis that is not there, you want many people to be angry at cops I've seen their reactions online, you also train many of them to be angry I know it. You put people's lives at risk that is so wrong! They even mock us with 60 minutes they show you real corruption but they know that most people aren't watching it or will miss it because there are three stories on it in an episode. It doesn't end there, if a person in Yemen went on to shoot up a cafe in Saudi Arabia after losing their loved one from a Saudi airstrike during a wedding, they could go on to commit a terrorist act in Saudi Arabia in a cafe and kill many people. The West would then air this and the viewers will say "yup Radical Islam" and now because of the internet people will talk about it for months, you then get mad because you haven't gotten over the fact that not all will like you. They US government could declare "we can't have any citizens from Yemen" which in my eyes would be the correct thing to do until it got resolved regardless if someone got mad here because remember people, these Muslims living here can also be a target of theirs this person in theory would probably target Arabians in America. I just looked out for you and all did was call me an "Islamophobe" when I may have just saved your life by speaking out. I might now get mad at you calling me an "Islamophobe" for being so arrogant since I'm going to help Islam's image whether you like it or not. You think everything is just one giant attack on you even if someone gives you good words but puts in it way of "just get of Islam in the West" you can respond with "yeah I hate these people" maybe 30% of them will say "thanks, you get it".

They think you are stupid and I'm telling you that you are not, you are lazy you don't read or fact check, that can change immediately if someone gave me a chance I sure will give you that chance. You need to know this because I want you on my side, people who read maybe four books and go on the internet do this and show up to religious centers thinking they are geniuses and we are all idiots for not being in their freemasonic cults, something anyone can do so I just hand this over to you. Does that sound at all difficult to you? Now why they pick evil, that's a whole other story. Tomi Lahren is a perfect example of this, she's 25 and she's already chosen evil.

No wonder why they have these random protests start up in countries, people are upset stemming from multiple stories and they go out for non issues that they want to be dealt with. I have to show you why Palestine is so important to me and CNN rarely ever talks about it. I'm going to help you so you don't post stuff on the internet comparing Trump rally's to Clintons with how many people show up because only vote totals count here, you don't need to tell people about it unless if it is just for laughs. I know this stuff doesn't happen by accident because I read the lines at the bottom of the screen from Fox News, that to me is real news and I would like to hear about it, check it out sometime! I had to separate these two paragraphs because this one is humorous by accident and I don't this funny at all. Do you think I would just sit here and take it? Rally's will always piss me off now because they have no clue as to why these wars don't end but both sides want them to, wars are never politics, and people die in them. Somehow they can teach you not to support slavery in school but they cannot teach you that we don't want wars in America so we tell the truth, we want peace and here's how to get it listen to others around you. I promise you that I've never had a class of that sort in the four years of college it was all to educate. If the people of Iraq knew we were physically fighting in classrooms in order to fix these issues think of how far that would go for them to know that. I am not allowing government to kill a civilian in a foreign country, do I have to bring these people of Yemen in for you to get that they want peace? I know you don't agree with some of their laws, but is that worth turning a blind eye and allowing them to get killed? They want your support, they like you! How big would it be for the world to take notice that we do everything we can to prevent conflict? This is neither a hobby nor a requirement, it is a chance to do something heroic the history books will take notice that America stood up and prevented this from continuing. We could fly a flag of Yemen the day after the conflict ceased, a new ally to embrace think of the letters we would get from people who would appreciate every bit of our support. My eyes light up seeing photos of people smiling and waving flags, I love liberation maybe someday you will feel the same.

Media can make claims of new Cold Wars with Russia when you aren't there for the talks, it could be going good after all but some of the news stations will say "nope" either for ratings or if you're like me you now sign off that you believe that all media is government owned and this "no" response is to confuse or scare you. I remember listening to Reagan saying that he was going to nuke Russia as a joke and thinking "that is so wrong" for a portion of people here in America, that is no different they really think Russia can attack invade America when I know they can't. Remember too that most Russians think just like Americans on this serious issue, if it wasn't safe to have kids than most wouldn't that it would break their heart to see their own kid killed in a war knowing it was better not to have that child. I've doubted myself in the past being a good parent, I would know. No wonder why the Iran-Iraq war would not end, the Iranians believed it was best to win back the land they had lost even if that meant their child could very well grow up without a father or mother if this were to escalate by way of another country invading because they will not quit under any circumstance. If that's not love for a child and trust in your country than I don't know what is. They had fought the war for Allah's sake thinking that Allah wanted it and wanted Iran to win thinking Allah picks sides in wars for a coup they had started so Saddam invaded Iran to initiate the war. That's why we send the youth to war, they don't have kids to watch over I get it now I always thought it was unfair now I won't say a word about it. They really believed in their leader that winning this war would make a statement for America who they viewed as the "Great Satan." I can't type this without crying because if I were an Iranian I would keep saying "no, no, no just let Iraq take that piece of land, we don't need it, I only gave this guy a chance because I hated the Shah, now he expects me to die for some oil field, forget the Shah, I'm going to fight you now get ready to be beaten up" not realizing what was going on at that time. If I were living in America in the 80's and I heard on my TV they called America "Great Satan", I would say "you don't threaten my country and my people, I hate genocidal freaks, end them." Every government must make the case for why they are sending you off to war, you and I both know that, this is how I would have reacted. I completely agree Iran that you should not mock a 77 year old leader but let these people leave, give them a 3 year ban if proven that they were laughing about it or were doing it for money. They don't get it; you don't need a society full of borderline Zealots, look at what it has turned into with people burning American flags out in public. They should not be having chants with everyone in the streets repeating what the leaders say. Can't they just cheer? I most certainly am not going to repeat what the guy says and I most certainly don't agree with the youth joining in. As much as I am against how big sports have become worldwide, how can anyone in the West relate to them? How many people would know that it was to unify the country? No wonder why no one wants to visit Iran, there goes potential money to be earned an 87% negative view of Iran from us Americans. I admit that it looks cool to me to see the youth chant it, but this is not a good trade off for Ahmadinejad to say "we mean the US government". Take it from me, I am 23, we have no clue what these people will be like in their 60's, let me tell you something you NEVER target the youth! They don't have to chant "death to America"; they can just say "Sharia Law is a human right, America is not a Christian nation" or "America has no military, no draft possible for the Zionist satellite". Yes, this is part about America; this is more about people's rights getting taken away in countries such as Greece. This is why I like Bashar Al Assad so much more; people in the West don't want a war with Iran most people are in America mostly for money. Don't doubt me because I would be there for the invasion fighting by your side.

Study these leaders of the Ottoman Empire; they are followers of the Abrahamic religions that means they are God's chosen leaders. If you want to become a leader, act like one and learn from others study by studying their dialogue and actions. This is within reach, it is meant for you. If you want something and you work for something, it is all yours.

Mehmed V, the Sultans replacement had catered to the Young Turks but did not let them control the empire. This was only in place for their economic reforms for more Socialism. This was until after WWI that they got full hold of the country and they conquered whatever remaining amount of Ottoman supporters were left after WWI ruined their military. It was still the Ottoman military with their ethics during WWI; this further disproves the Armenian Genocide. It became Turkey in 1922 which marks the end of the Ottoman Empire. Now we see these Turks electing the Muslim Brotherhood to lead their country which might very well be the complete opposite of the Ottoman Empire so they cannot appreciate any Ottoman accomplishments. What would the majority of Turks today care if the Ottomans are innocent or not? It makes no sense. It doesn't apply to them.

Isn't it odd we know absolutely nothing about the people of Iraq? What study or book can you trust in order to inform you? There could be fighters in the far west of Iraq who aren't willing to fight unless someone invades their town. There could be looters; there could be people who want to leave Iraq for good. These people could be extreme pacifists now for all we know. It's not like you can survey them and ask "would you consider attacking America if given the chance?" How are the American people expected to solve issues when we aren't told anything about the Iraq people, or are we left out? If we are, then the Iraqi people can never hold us American people accountable, the Iraqis need to at least know that the majority here have no clue what is going on in their country.

America arms rebel groups to no end in it. I have enough information to know who to arm, but I don't know if the opposition will quit or not. I trust the military however to get the job done, they don't need to tell the public. You only have to tell the troops what is going on. The local citizens will get the message. On that note, I know the enemy has a plan, I just doubt anyone has a clue of what it is. They could attack Jordan next in five years for all we know. I couldn't tell someone what the 06 Lebanon war accomplished for them, but they knew what was going to happen, it's not like they were unable to capture South Lebanon. Trust me if I had a clue of what was going to happen next I would tell everyone on the internet just to look smart. Sometimes I wonder if it is even coordinated at this point because even if Syria fell, Iran would not allow Lebanon to fall and would restore part of Syria. For what it's worth, Iraq is doing fine even if it is divided. My guess is that they will have Saudi Arabia attack them directly and will have the conflict take place in Jordan which would be extremely shady for the average viewer at home. I say this because the war shouldn't go through Jordan but would have to because of the scale of it, there would be no way around it. They would leave the Palestinians out of it while giving them their state. Jordan should be easy to wreck, their credit rating outlook is negative which is bad for them. This will cause chaos in Jordan because Jordanians will be the target for both sides. They could even have America side with (arm and send military tactics to) Saudi Arabia for "oil related deals that have America's best interest" during the war because the cable station at home tells many people that "wars are for oil." Hilary Clinton will yell at someone in congress saying "we have to do what's best for the American people!" The Saud foreign minister will say that they have to keep Gaza safe and "do what's right." This will require them to march through Jordan to reach it but the enemy will not let them get that far saying that they must protect their citizens. A country like Germany would then side with the enemy for "moral reasons" thus creating a phony split amongst NATO. This would then spark outrage in America expecting for a different foreign policy giving our enemy the full support because war unites people. Iran meanwhile would tell the below 5% of Shiite's in Jordan to move to Syria permanently in order to be safe and stationed. I'm willing to put money on that being the next war mainly because 95% of people in the West will only pick one of two sides and will not take the third option of Iran/Hezbollah/Secularists or a fourth of Sunni's. What makes our enemy so powerful is that they can use war and confusion amongst citizens to get what they want. People living in Lebanon will not trust each other in the future and won't know who which neighbors want or are willing to kill them in order to keep their family safe. We will have to show time and time again that no Islamic, Jewish, Christian, and Druze sect will ever be our target; we don't look for conflict that is not there. Unfortunately, there will be instances of civilian deaths but we must stick together or trust each other if we are to be separate because Lebanon has no military, there is no other solution. If we are separate, then we cannot arm the Sunni troops who fight by our side because the tension will already be high, we cannot get in their way so if that means many of them dying as a result then there was nothing we could have done to prevent it. If they accept arms then we will give arms but they won't want arms. Even if we don't trust each other, this can still work in both Sunni Shia favor. Any group that allows the enemy access into Lebanon be it Wahhabists, Zionists, or America will automatically be the target unless if they agree to a ceasefire. They want us to attack, that is their goal. If we show the Sunnis that we don't want to strike them, maybe they will see beyond letting the enemy enter the country on their behalf.

If you keep this up, every day of your life will have purpose and meaning to it. Think about it, you need every day you can get. Each day will get you closer to your goals and new goals will be created, it will never end. Victories will come; you can challenge those who are twice your age. These are the best days of your life; your childhood sucked there is nothing to reminisce about because you are going forward. You can appreciate what you accomplished back when you were 19 but those days were not better in any way shape or form. The right people like you such as Ayesha Gaddafi and they are what count, not your friends or family. She has your back no matter what. It's on you to help others out who don't get the rights you get. You're someone who gets it; it could be you who was born in Libya. I'm not giving up, ever. This is your dream, you get to live it. How many people can say that here in America? Not many, I can promise you that.

If someone were to read the lives of Saddam, Hafez, Gamal, and Muammar, they would learn that these people were destined for success; they got it and are leaders. They worked hard, believed, were humble, were independent, were educated, were honest, had a religion, and the will to help others. The right people gave them a chance. That's like winning the lottery only better. That's why the 14th of July Revolution happened in 1958; they had to keep their citizens safe from harm's way. You will see overtime that the citizens will start winning these wars they fight, that's why Syria was saved. These leaders are not perfect in any way, but they get it and they speak their minds because they believe in their movement which enables them to get passionate over it. They are speaking truths. Gamal was described as incorruptible, that is incredible, you have to vote for him. Don't give up, not because of other people who've been through much worse than you but because you want to win. You want to put your heart into this. Every day is yours, they did this to inspire you waiting for someone to come along and give them the honor they deserve.

"Why should he raise a banner that says he has a brother that is unjustly arrested?....When will the government return to its senses?" Nimr Al Nimr. He lived in the real world, draw from him, his message is so powerful, don't be a robot. Nimr showed us how to show others he cares. He got right to the point in showing corruption in Saudi Arabia.

In Sunni Islam, you can declare war on your neighbors if you think it will work as long as the enemy knows beforehand. In today's world, most if not all Sunnis are against just starting wars for the reason alone that they can be won. In Shia Islam, you can start a political revolution of Shia's at any time in any country. I would be Sunni because I don't deem it necessary to divide each other and because Shia's wait for the other country to declare war on them first. That's not to say I don't think Shia Islam's goals will work. I would be a Sunni with a ceasefire once proven that the other country can stay intact, I would only add those who support us into the empire as part of our land, and it would be tough to answer if the supporters in the country wanted more land. I would probably say yes as long as it did not wreck the other country because it would paint us as barbaric when we are not. Iran knows that Maduro has done a horrible job running the country. However because they believe in democracy always winning, they have to support him regardless of the fact that many people vote for him out of fear of the West, because of benefits, or are drug dealers. Iran waits until the final day for the country to collapse or it will not. I would force a separation at the least there. The Shiites in Iraq probably supported Saddam because in Shia Islam, they have to go with who is the leader of their country if he serves their best interest, I could be wrong about Shia Islam here. Thankfully Iran only arms Shiite's in countries and will train military officials to some degree only if it is an Islamic run country. I don't think they arm non Islamic countries. This is bad because sick Castro will not allow people to leave the country, Iran does not support this but because the voters want him, they will allow him to do so. I would even install the Ottoman Empire in Cuba helping them expand if that is what it took to make the people there free. It's about doing the right thing. The war would only be done if the ends justifies the means because Castro will have generations of millions of people enslaved for his own gain, if he changed very soon which he won't then we won't have to start a war with 5 million Cubans dead. 5 million in the future would have to be saved and I'm sure his government will be around for another 100 years unfortunately. It may only require us to take a small part of the cost of the island to save the innocent Cubans. This would result in 10,000 dead I estimate. I'm ok with this as an alternative because Castro will still be humiliated and will throw his temper tantrum but nothing will come of it. If Shia Islam is for democracy, then they should not allow him to kill people who protest. I'm not sure if they would arm him or not but they will sell arms to him. This is incompatible with me because I am a Dictator. You would have to overthrow my supporters to get rid of me even if there are just 40% of our party supporters in the country at time of the overthrow. Even if that 40% of the party supporters are divided amongst me being replaced, I won't allow them to be divided, I would work something out. I would want a two party system in hopes we would achieve a one party rule someday.

What will end out happening is that I will join forces with the Shiite's unless if there is a Sunni run army that I think will not collapse. I will instantly go to the Sunni group unless if their training is poor. If there is a Christian militia I will join it first but I don't see the point in separation of Sunni and Christian because I allow their Sharia Law so long as we follow our own set of laws, not that I would have say in it. If I think Secularism is best under the scenario, then we have to go with it. I will continue to say that Bashar Al Assad is best for Syria so I will align myself with his troops; I could even join their military because he is secular which means he does not pick Sunni or Shia which means I support him. That means Iran is doing the right thing because he is not running a Shia Islam country, it is not a matter of an ally of Shia Islam. This means they will support Secularists who help Shia Islam in the long run. I can get them to dump Cuba because at this point all it's about is trade, Cuba won't even help Bashar Al Assad out in Syria. I have no clue why Hafez thought the Middle East would be better off without Saddam in Iraq because he supported Iran during the 1980 war. He made it clear that he would rather better his relations with Iran; he must have wanted a democracy in Iraq to vote Saddam out which I would not have agreed with.

Generally the Sunni's won't get involved with our enemy and wars on Hezbollah because Lebanon is divided. I feel I have to support them in some way shape or form but we can't show the Sunni's that they are the target next which makes it difficult. I would be fighting a serious conflict like in 1982 when the Lebanese Front sided with the enemy. If the Maronites return, do not trust them. It has become clear to me that they were going to use America to defend the Lebanese Front country and have the Islamic countries attack it to liberate the Muslims in Lebanon. They did this to form an alliance of our enemies, it did not work. Anytime the enemy imposes a country like that on us, you can tell it will be trouble in the future and we would be depicted as the terrorists because they won. This plan would have failed anyways because if America really were a Christian nation we would side with the Muslims because we don't tolerate murder. It's even tougher to solve in Syria where the FSA is all but gone and have joined Al Nusra Front. That means no one can support them at this point. It has failed and probably will never return because I will not join forces with a group that wrecks Syria in the process. The war has lost and Bashar has offered them to live there as long as they put down their arms. What's left of the FSA is divided but they still believe they are right to go to war. The ones who think they are under attack are now siding with the Kurds; I will work with them to have them put down their arms. That's why I think we need to move the remaining FSA supporters into Iraq so long as they don't side with Turkey.

Thankfully, America country can never conquer Syria, Iraq, Lebanon, Palestine, and Iran. The people of these countries are simply too strong for anyone to harm. That's why we all chant Death to America, because we care about the Americans too who are oppressed. Many of the adult's do not think here, this would be a non issue if America didn't have such military capability to attack us. We seek justice in the world. Many of the citizens of America believe that everyone who is against the wars should just leave. So you want all of your countries critics gone while your military starts wars to kills innocents and your TV lies about it? Are you seriously ok with this? Think of Mark Love, he openly lies but expects people to apologize to him.... you mislead a person. Shouldn't I be concerned as to why you don't respond?

Also he can lie but expect an apology from someone else, huh? Back to the point, if a war is to break out here, do not fight in it. America cannot run itself with the citizens it has, it does not matter if 30% of the population is smart enough to make it run, the 70% will ruin it so there is no fight to be fought here.

You're not expected to donate over a certain amount of you paycheck to charity because you know these same people would not do the same for you. Also you have to watch out for yourself as well, you can end up homeless here. Only take what you need and then some, be fair minded. Don't feel shame for things you buy or what your weight is, you can look good at the least.

Here's the issue with the Sunni-Shia here and why it will struggle here in America- enough Muslims who come in expect others to be tolerant of them. They condemn others who know little about Islam and are against it. They make things so much worse because the person already doesn't like you and now you get mad at others for being friends with those who dislike Islam. Then there are people who just ruin it for everyone else here is an example- you don't use taqiyya (lying) to cover something up. You want the other person to get justice so they see the good in the religion. That guy needs to be thrown in jail. I've met plenty of good and respectful ones but that's just me, I judge others by character first. The issue is those who want a fight on the internet. Most also vote Socialist which is considered to be anti-American and makes things so much worse. I'm going to side with those who are intolerant of Islam because you want things you way and it won't happen. You make things so much worse for Palestine because you want to paint Americans certain ways if they don't do exactly what you want instead of realizing why they don't like you whether fair or not, that's not what this is about. If you had spent the time showing Bahrain protests to people who don't like Islam, maybe they would have befriended you because it is a common cause. All Muslim countries have borders, even before then there were villages. If you say you want open borders, you are not my friend and I don't support you at all. I don't expect anyone to be tolerant of Islam. You need to grow up if it upsets you that some people want an enemy overseas because they don't like how your countries are run; I'm not one of those people by the way. Let's look at this from another angle, if someone was visiting Jordan and wore a shirt with an American flag and someone walked up to this person and said "I don't agree with your stance" and then the American responds back with a USA chant, you would not tolerate it either from the American. I would expect the exact same if I were in their country, it's your job to find those who enjoy being around you. We are not all going to do exactly what you want even if you think your demands are simple. Most of you journalists are silent about mass immigration in Europe so I, you know who you are. Don't try to tell me that you would like if Qatar took in 3 million Americans, you are a colonialist even if you think that they have to go Europe to be safe, we know Turkey is.

When a politician makes a statement or comments on a recent event- What did the person mean by his or her statement? Was the person saying it to be rude? Are they distorting facts? What are definitions of certain words they used mean in context? What is the opposition saying? Are there more than two perspectives on the matter? What is their goal behind their narrative or are they telling the truth? These people are smart, try to understand what they are saying. Why should I listen to you? This also applies to you because others trust you. Thankfully, you get to decide who is right and who is wrong as long as you explain why others should believe what you are saying over what they hear from others. Your record is what is important, you won't get every story right but you make a great case for yourself if you get the stories that matter most correct. You are one of the few ones who sees why we have schools to educate others; it's never there to punish or to make them only good in one category. These people say "oil, oil, oil," constantly to tell others how to think, that's not you. You are wise and you keep everything straight to the point to be honest to others; you aren't goofy like them knowing that would reflect poorly on those who agree with you. Journalism is a fight with wins and losses for yourself; you contribute because you want to help others, stick to the facts if there is some gray area thinks before posting it. If you won't inform others, who will? I don't know how to respond to that question but with silence.

I want to give you an idea of how stupid some people are here- as a customer, you are allowed to verbally abuse an employee. Who would side with someone who made the case that "employees serve customers", so you want people get off being narcissists? Why can't you kick someone out for being rude? That's why I hate restaurants; I don't need someone to serve me. I get that you're paying them for a service but really? Also, they can't punch me that's assault but they probably could if it were legal, the boss could say "oh well, that's part of your job" ah ha! Maybe there is a good reason behind it because an employee could say that they were being verbally abused and it would require the customer to explain that they were not being rude at all which is wasting the customer's time.

We do schoolwork because we get education from it. It's not to get you a good job, it's to make you work and learn in the process. If the material doesn't help educate, inform you, or it doesn't make you think, then it must be shut off. Education makes you smarter, so does hard work. For the youth who view themselves as failing in school, I won't stop them. I'd rather see them do something they are good at that helps society because we are in this together. I really think there is a solution for those who don't want to go to school, if we made them think and they worked hard to show us a cause they support and how we can help; maybe it will help them out. School is supposed to be a good thing, not a punishment. I'm ok with people passing who fail the tests so long as they put in the work. If they don't do the work then they have to fail.

I would reverse the Aliyah and send them back to Europe that would be rewarding. He described the Holocaust as a "myth" if you believe it than you fall victim of it which is what the enemy wants. What makes this so great is that I trust him the same way you people trust your own countries leaders. Now I can do good in the world.

An attack on Islam is now an attack on you because Islam has your best interest. You will have to tell people to stop using the "1.2 billion Muslims" argument because that only helps others believe that even a small minority within Islam wants to kill them which are untruthful on the Muslims holding those signs up. Essentially they are taking a loss and a hit on behalf Islam it's like saying "yeah but" which is weak. If someone were to bring up slavery, I would mention how the Ottoman Empire ended slavery because of Sunni Islam to help improve their empire, not for their image or for humanitarian reasons; slavery never was cost efficient because you had to pay for each slave's healthcare. These people will have to know the truth but they aren't ready for it that's why I ask some of the parents to hide their faith in public and hope that their friends don't realize. They also have to be against the welfare fraud, having five kids in Europe etc (video reference). I highly doubt that these people in Europe read the Quran or even can read, they just go by what someone else told them. It states in the Quran that we are on the same team, colonizing Europe is wrong with no way around it. They have to stop, think, and ask if beating up a Christian is righteous or not. All I ask is that you look someone in the eye when doing it so you know what you are doing. With lies people smirk about doing it, I've noticed that Zionists and US soldiers wear sunglasses probably because they don't want to feel any regret when attacking a civilian or forcing them to leave their homes because the other person is furious at their actions. Some I've noticed have smiled doing so. We need to raise the youth so they can inform others within Islam and get passionate about Islam like callers do about their football teams. These Mosques are just like teams and can be improved on, we have nothing to hide. I do not condemn Atheists for the not so distant past Atheism had their share of wars and genocides and I ask they not condemn us in return because both Atheists and followers of Abraham are done fighting. If there are those who aren't fully committed with Islam, they must leave it for Christianity. It is for their own good for the time being. Islam is not a clique or fashion statement. Absolutely do not condemn others who eat pork because of your religious beliefs that is so hypocritical, whatever you are doing on the weekends is worse than the person who eats pork.

If everyone keeps getting challenged on the TV with all these concepts such as White Nationalists, will that make the majority of us all scholars? It could be possible! They must learn to check their sources and to hear other point of views. Internets will have to keep banning members in the mean time because arguments go back and forth until moderators can get both people to leave the arguments outside of the forms.

It's all the same- "Make America Great Again", fire Roger Goodell, top dollar meaning America being number #1 in standard of living, half off drinks Wednesday, raising the minimum wage, ending corporations owning shares of media, having 12 parties (Sweden, direct reference right there), taxing the rich at 90%, "fixing" immigration, close the Federal Reserve, Free Tibet, and lowering greenhouse gasses. It all helps David Rockefeller out; he will give you any of these choices for how you think America should be run just for your vote. Just because it changed from Capitalism in the 60's to whatever he pushes on you now it really doesn't mean anything to him. He's reasonable too, he wants to get to know what you personally want so he can accommodate revolutions in countries.

Everything in the Bible and Quran is defined, you are wrong if you treat your neighbor badly on purpose. These people can alter anything at any time in their country so for them there is no rule and no law to be nice to your neighbor. We respond with "we can't alter it" the only thing they can say is that they won't allow corruption to alter it because they know if their constitution changed than it could be but with us our whole society will fall because we quit because of the Bible was no longer our path.

These countries control newspapers or the internet now. They will write whatever they want to fit their agenda or worse only have a bias and they pass that off as news. The example I give is a videogame company letting someone test out a video game then asking the kid how he felt, the kid then responds and they make adjustments. It can't be anything more or less than that. Instead of an achievement in a videogame, they will give you stuff you want to hear like the Iranian Hostage Crisis during the super bowl as a special on the NFL Network for the impact it had on football, I don't make this stuff up. The people who watched it at home would call it a "great victory for America" and cheer from it. However it doesn't qualify for more than two minutes worth of a story but it was turned into an hour long segment. One of my neighbors who moved in for a brief period would absolutely go along with it not realizing what the story was about and how it does not matter to football or anyone playing the game at all. I always wondered if the rich would sit around and laugh when they saw someone do something stupid like get slapped in the face for 20 dollars, but for something this dumb I think the producer just said "ok fine, let me get back to my family now."

These wars do not happen by accident or for oil. Saddam never plotted to attack the West. But really, this is the one region that is deeply religious and has ancient artifacts that nowhere else has such as the museum of Iraq. The only other instance is the Great Wall of China but that is not a piece of art. Everything else is in the Middle East. Bashar Al-Assad had an interview where he talked about how Arabs are descendents of Noah's son Shem, in the West we would laugh at someone who said that let alone a leader. No one in the West bothered to insult him for that, maybe a columnist or two but not CNN; it's not even on his Wikipedia page.

The Germans were led by good occultists who were not trying to run the world and had cared about others. The positive rituals such as bonfires they wanted to perform were to better their society or to unite people. They never attacked Christianity they only tried to change its customs such as getting rid of the cross symbol. I don't take that the wrong way at all and they never did it in hiding. I promise they are good because at no point did they try to suppress knowledge nor did they try to force their system on others, they were upfront every step of the way. They were just like everyone else except their life was so tough that they left Christianity because of unfortunate reasons thinking that there was some other way to rebuild Europe stronger at the time. Just look at Mussolini, he used God as a platform to get his point across he said things I do not say but he did it out of passion and love for all Italians. As a reward, God made him religious later on in life.

No wonder why the Germans burned so many books. In German colleges they were telling people how to think, feel, and act. This targeted the rich because only the rich could afford college so now they would feel empathy for the poor for something is far out of their control. They would write nasty stuff about Germans and how they are responsible for WWI and the only way was to become Socialist. These weren't books; they were methods to engineer people. Ahmadinejad said it best "the Palestinians are labeled Anti-Semites" that's not a solution; it gets worse because now they see that Europe hates what they think is Islam and people on the internet say stuff like "go bomb yourself." The Palestinians are amazing, they won't quit and I thought I was the big enemy for my skin color and being a male all along; these people who hate me here really don't matter they can only see what is right infront of them I can smile now because what they are doing doesn't matter but I hid from it in college somehow thankfully. I'm confident that I could do the same thing with many college textbooks that aren't real information and cannot be proven; all they are doing is teaching me their theory which is not changing nor improving just think of all of the anti feminist backlash on the internet you would think the internet would support them based on how many people are sent to college but nope people know it's senseless. I knew it, that college was worthless thanks to Peter Schiff if only I knew it was to target people who want everything their way. It shows you how hopeless Mike was for shaming people for Native Americans famines he didn't research, do I have to look up a Portuguese genocide and fight? What do you want me to do, leave? What is this activism you are promoting? These people don't even define their goals. this superior culture I don't care and I'm not attacking the Arabians ever especially when they are identical to Americans, these people could be your friends, is women driving worth looking down on these people? Not for me, I can appreciate how they've doubled their life expectation in under a generation. Their women are beautiful with they dress and I know Saud authority doesn't want that sentence but don't worry I don't plan on marrying one. The image they've invented for Saudi Arabia is wrong and they know it. I ask is that people abroad never interfere with American society, what you do, I'm not going to question your judgment and I don't bash you for the actions of a part of your country, see ceasefires are a good thing, I can be your friend now if you choose. I want to be your friend. I'm never looking to argue, we can discuss the Hadith together and if the Saud authority abides by it. After all, you want to help inform me don't you? I have questions and I expect answers, I appreciate your knowledge of the Sunni Hadith's as long as you respond with "we differ" or "read more and come back later" and you respond with "we differ" after the second response is brought up, that works fine. We aren't going to agree on everything after all, we should base our conversations off what we agree on. I respect you after all as long as you don't give it up because of American society then I have lost all respect for you because you are a quitter. No one ever said we needed a clash of the cultures; we can just live our lives day to day. What makes this so great is that my vote doesn't count in your country and yours doesn't count in mine unless if you want it that way which I sure don't. If we counted everyone's vote in the world than why bother having borders or citizenships? I know it wouldn't work too, people would just all go to the richest countries they already do that here with cities which lead to overcrowding in places such as LA, this leads to unemployment and misuse of oil resources because now people have to drive an hour to work.

People don't get it; they don't see the disastrous effects of both WWI and WWII on Europe. If they did they would ask themselves "how come America didn't help Germany after WWII" or "why did Germany keep fighting when they were about to lose?" Just look at how many people died during and after both world wars. I've read the stuff on Germany during WWII in Berlin, nothing describes Hitler as a tyrant, they just explain their side with hiding facts and distorting reality in a thoughtful manner, what I read was not an attack on Hitler at all. But when you are taught it in school you watch movies and your teachers say "it will never happen again" not realizing that we are learning from history, not telling others what to do. You can't tell me to feel empathy for these people, we have to analyze what's right in front of us or else that is your ally on purpose. We also have to decide if the war reparations cost Germany too much since Germany and America has the same balance sheet.....that means I am paying for WWII.

Was Nicholas II right to target the Jews for forming a state within a state in Russia? Yes, he was right to do so because they wanted to overthrow him no matter what he did. Was he wrong to target these people? Yes. He did not know that there was a small minority of them that abided by Russia's laws. They responded with saying that he was a bigot. It had hurt them so much when they lost Germany in WWI but it had to be done because of Germany's alliance with Ottoman Empire. At no point did they want to wreck Germany with Socialism. It was too late for Germany to survive and Germany opposed Lenin who was the better option for them, nothing is ever personal with these people except with Russia, they hated Russia because Russia wanted to kick them out to add them to the long list of countries who don't like them. That's what the Spanish Inquisition was for; it had nothing to do with Muslims, they knew they could hold off the Muslims and that people opposed Muslims in Spain so they were an easy target if war were to ever break out. Who knows for sure if they foster that same hatred for Iran? I know that they wanted them to intervene in Bahrain to create the image that Iran is trying to run the Middle East and force convert others which we now know to be false.

How can I be an anti-Semite? These people don't abide by countries laws. What would happen in America if I started funding Daesh? Do you think people here would be ok with it? They would do the same if they were still in Russia. That's just what these people do; they want their own set of rules they targeted the Shah same with the Tsar because he didn't do what they wanted. That's why I know they own the UN, over 70% of the world recognizes Palestine but they won't allow it. Just look at how many people walked out during Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's speech about Palestine. They've targeted every single country and overthrown most whose countries have funded the West Bank during these Intifada's and wars from the 70's.

These same Freemasons were the first to violate rules of war by going to war during the nighttime against the paid for Germans to gain independence, smoked pot while deciding laws probably on purpose, they hid to avoid fights, they threw tea overboard, and they would go around burning printing presses during war. Someone in an interview claimed that someone else was present when they were writing the constitution; could it be that they were told what to write in it? It took two world wars in under 35 years to get them to win, everything happened so fast just think of nukes in the Middle East. 30 years later they try to capture most of Egypt and part of Syria. 10 years later they try to rebuild Lebanon. To put this into perspective, WWI was to destroy Christian Europe, WWII was to get the Zionists to Palestine and to spread Atheism, and WWIII is the final fight and it is against Islamic countries, all religion, and the Holy Land they want to blow up all of the artifacts.

These people wreck the education system, go home and educate themselves. They also get full scholarships at the most expensive colleges and get the best paying jobs it is an endless cycle. This is all done for them to think "Goyim are stupid!!!" while getting the best possible tutors yet these same people are just making education system cater to them, they can't all of these answers in any category right. When they are good at something like economics what does it matter really when no one else cares? Aren't we all good at something, how do you value education more than construction I have no clue because you need these people to do labor so you don't have to wreck your body later on in life. This doesn't apply to all of them, some of them are very polite about it and don't mock others who aren't as smart as them. They have friends too who put in the work which makes no sense to me because they look down on these people as inferior; I would never befriend someone I thought was inferior I would never do that. The whole equality in the Soviet Union is such a lie if these people really believe they are better than me. What bugs me too is that they hide it in public and are friendly to others. How can you be better than me if you worship Satan? What makes you think he even likes you? He is still their superior, he is better than them according to them so are they going to fight Satan? He won't take it; I ask them to stop for their own good. That's why I love God, he will end all confusion and I won't have to worry about rebelling about him because he will give me perfection, I would be an idiot to do so thinking that I could do his job when I have no power at all he has proven this to me and I thank him for giving me life. He's shown me that his methods work because we are the most charitable people in the world. These people would go out and donate more money than me to charity and miss the point entirely because the people they donate to will still believe that Jesus is the Messiah and that will anger them expecting them to convert to Talmudism and they would call them names because they wouldn't convert. That's what the Soviet Union was meant to be, a big slap in the face to Christianity where they could use people to work their hardest so you would have no rights reference gulags, we Muslims want to give you that day off as the Sabbath. It's a good thing that people don't get what is going on, I would be in jail for telling others about this under the claim of siding with the enemy. They have some senseless people here where if you are a youth and Christian they will think you want to harm them if you say that you side with the Muslims, thankfully they can be avoided easily. With the internet, people everywhere would have known how bad it was to live in the Soviet Union and there would have been no Cold War.

If not for nukes in our enemies country, Syria would allow the Palestinians to get past the border because of the 90s Intifada and would at the very least take the 1967 land back which the Palestinians are extremely reasonable over and would not go further than that. They would have to do the 90s Intifada all over again 20 years later. Every single citizen in a Muslim country is against them, the enemy knows this and most in the West can pick up on it thinking that they are mad they have neighbors set in the middle of the Arab world. The Saud family could never stop Syria from doing so because then people in Arabia would know the Saud's are enemies of Islam; it would never go away and would be told for generations. Allowing opening the borders would cause chaos in Palestine and the international community would take note of how poorly they treat the Palestinians to the point where they would not let them leave. If America invaded, these people would not surrender and would call up Sunni's and Shia's in neighboring countries for help; they would be united as one and the West bank would be overpopulated. That must be in part why they give people in Saudi Arabia so much money to spend, they don't want them to care and it is working for the enemy. As an American, I would not allow a foreign invasion into Canada from the Soviet Union, I would be furious largely because you can see this happen hours away driving distance but you know not to go anywhere near it even though it is on a massive scale. I can avoid ghettos in cities and I can drive through them, gang shootings and other crimes happen so little I can brush it off plus I cannot stop them so there's no reason to get angry because eventually most of those who do real trouble like child prostitution will get caught eventually. That's why the enemy takes small pieces of land, these people have their set of rules, and literally no country does something like this.

It shows you how evil the majority of the citizens are in the country because if China invaded westward, their own citizens would not let them take small pieces of land at a time because even they care about China's image or others at the least. They would expect China to declare war, not force people out of their homes slowly and the majority will pick up on it. They did too in the Sino-Vietnamese War under territory claims and "discrimination" so even China has decency to let them know "hey we want this land and we are trying to do the right thing for Chinese people here" for their own citizens to know. You fight the military that Palestine doesn't have, win, wait for them to surrender, and force them out of the land. But even then in the last 200 years they may have been one instance where people have been forced out of land. What would happen is that you would win and then either force convert people or make sure that they cannot possibly rebel. I don't want to put this sentence in but it doesn't make sense from a military standpoint because you make more enemies. You wouldn't keep pushing them further and further out, I'm serious no military does this because it doesn't make sense to. Japan might have killed or enslaved all of the Chinese, but never would they keep pushing them back. These people are so easy to hate because the ones in the occupied parts of the West Bank say "we are just living here peacefully, there's no big deal we don't want war" as if it is the Palestinians job to let them stay but they control how many people can be in Haifa so no return for many who lost their homes. These people don't allow open borders in their country, we know that because of the strictest immigration standards in the world, it's not even close because even in Saudi Arabia you have to do is convert to Sunni Islam but with these people you need "authentic Jewish blood." They even have a 24 hour government run group that calls people who they see holding hands with a Muslim to talk them out of it, who does that?! It's called interfaith dating. Even in Saudi Arabia, the absolute worse their police would tell me is "don't do that in public or else we will have you deported." This country will always have to be protected and immigration controlled the fact that they keep moving into the West Bank (taking more of this very important land) should tell you something! As a Christian, if I thought the Palestinian Christians were doing a bad job and leading them to war, I would have to hand it over to the Muslims, the last thing I would want is a war in it, non religious people will never understand because if the Palestinians chose to live under poverty instead of my superior economic system, I would have to grant it to them to prevent war. Here in America it is different I can't explain, think of the Civil War both sides would not put their arms down. This goes far beyond oil or dollars you know what I'm referencing, if you think oil is first for these people than I can't stop you at this point because oil would not make sense to fly your flag over some other countries land. If you really put oil first, you would want peace with your neighbors at worse you would destabilize them and show that you are protecting their best interest by building them back up. I can't say it better than that.

Your military blows up their homes and you still think it is right to live in part of the West Bank. They would never allow the Palestinians to do the same. You may not want war, but your military does and you do nothing at all to prevent them from doing so. Maybe if you sided with the Palestinians then they would let you live in their part of the West Bank. They don't even ask themselves "hey maybe it would be best if I didn't live right here because these people are being taken advantage of and I can help promote peace by getting up and leaving." They must really be stupid if they are still convinced that what they are doing is wise or is in any way appropriate in any circumstance. They are clearly worsening any steps toward peace; I'd love to meet that scholar at a college who thinks it is normal to do that. I don't even live there and I can figure this out, this part requires time to rationalize to be honest. This entire slow joke is about getting international support for the enemy, someone cannot prove me otherwise. This has been around forever, the British printing press would not allow the people to know when the Boer Wars were not going according to plan because at the very least, people cared for their military and wanted to keep them safe knowing that without the military, they would not have nice things. If someone finally agrees with me and says "Oh great these are religious wars" I can now respond and say "right, you get it! Now who is trying to make things worse? Oppose both if I didn't convince you enough that one side is all at fault!"

Iran has to accept that there is going to be people in their country that will be against them. There was always Communists in America at every point; it is something to live with. Shaming people or scaring them is not working; you have to be peaceful about this. You have to trust these people that if war were to ever happen; they would leave and stay neutral. Scaring people only makes things worse for the majority; if you were so confident about Shia Islam then you would not be worried about there being people who don't support Shia Islam. You people who promote this are directly responsible for these protests, I don't want to see these protestors get hurt, it looks bad for Iran that protests can't be peaceful and ignored just walk away. You think everything is one giant attack from the West when in reality you can't just be civil about something that doesn't threaten you or anyone else personally. If I held up a sign that had a message of "Iran is not perfect, there was one injustice that later got resolved, down with Khomeini!" who is being the unreasonable one here? Do you think Iran can ever be perfect? I don't, you turned a good sign into something to be angry about.

What makes the people of Syria so different is that they go their day to day lives knowing that there is a war going on hours away. If I can visualize it, it would be like if the war took place in their town, they would get upset about it instead of being scared. They would complain about it like when a girl gets cut infront of at a line in Starbucks. It reminds me of the Jerry Springer Show where everything is normal to these people like fighting onstage infront of an audience. I am proud of the Syrians for accepting their environment around them and for not turning against each other. I'm going to learn to get over this stuff, I know there are people killed in Palestine monthly but even they go day to day they get over it they just lose a friend. This is the real world, not some horrific nightmare for them; it just happens unjustly to them, if you notice most if not all of these people are either calm, prideful (good stuff), or are angry about it which is a good sign. They can easily talk about losing two of their close ones at a young age. I know what is right and wrong with what is going on but part of growing up and accepting what these people do which we can use against them. What's done is done, now we can just show our support, educate, and help others. All of these wars after the Iraq War are far overblown even the two million refugees that isn't a big deal. 17 million people in Syria and 250k dead from 5 years of war. Maybe Bashar Al Assad just brushes this off because he knows it will end well for them but with Libya that was it and that was tragic but it's in the past just like WWII. There isn't much to follow with these wars, I enjoyed learning about the Iraq Civil War but things should ease there so whatever America had planned short term didn't work, in the next ten years they will strike again in Iraq with the Kurds and Turkey or something, the Iraqis won't have any of it if Turkey tries to invade their land I can anticipate that happening because the Kurds and Turks hate each other. All they will do is just keep trying to create enemies for the Iraqi people and have endless wars even if they are low scale which gets our enemy nowhere. It means something for them because Iraq is in the middle and that makes for a center place for them to export their Wahhabism or whatever they have planned next. I don't think the Jordan War I have in mind will happen in less than 30 years.

It shows you how backwards this country is where Saudi Arabia donates 25 million dollars to Hillary Clintons campaign. TV shouldn't be costing us more than $5 a month so the American government is giving TV corporations 25 million dollars to advertise on TV channels, we don't need any ads on TV at all it doesn't matter if it is Wal-Mart or "vote Clinton." The money is used to make overpriced commercials, the best that money can buy. Those 25 million dollars goes to waste. That money can be used to hire people in Africa to invest in more resources and equipment. The workers can use the dollars to buy wood from China in order to build homes. See people, where else would find someone smart enough to be upset at the money handed over to TV station contractors?

What do any of these celebrities matter? They are not me. They are not Thomas Sowell, I can't learn from them. All Lebron is good at is a basketball game, that doesn't carry over in the real world. He has to have a whole crew follow and leach off of him for him to feel good about himself. What exactly did he accomplish? I don't value being the best at basketball than I do authors of books to teach us truth. I give Lebron a break though he's reasonable; it's Michael Jordan who needs everything to be expensive like anyone cares. It's not that I dislike these people, it's just that they don't matter most of them are clowns.

We know Feminism to be unnatural because the marriage fails. It states in the Bible that women must obey the man. What the Kurds are doing with their own people is pointless and serves no purpose at all. They must have picked up Feminism by accident. Maybe they are just feminist by name and don't actually live by that lifestyle. I had seen a small part of a TV show where the mother controlled everyone and did not take criticism, who would do something like that? That's abusing power; you can prove it in court since authority is meant with good intent. It's failing too, your kids hate you for it, and they don't respect you at all.

These people on the internet gave you a chance. America did not, just stating facts here. All votes get blocked in a democracy when 2/3rds of the population vote based on their paycheck. It's true that our leaders reflect us and that's why America's leaders lead the pack in corruption. It is illogical to vote.

I'm only going to address this once, why do people care about elections? Does it bother you so much to watch the other candidate win? You don't have to listen to any of their speeches, the only laws you have to follow here are the ones set forth by America. I don't agree with the laws here, I just live under them so if Trump were to lower taxes on the rich, deal with it or you are dumb and you don't realize how minor tax increases/decreases are for it to bother you. Guess what, other people here don't like Trump so you can talk to them as well! You say trump is rude to women. Ok two things, how I define rude and two if I find him guilty of it, both answers are no. Go fight with someone else about it. This conversation serves no purpose at all. I know the one attacking Trump is a girl but we can beat each other up if she wants but I don't even feel like it, rather just not bother is there anything else the girl and I can talk about or should we just never talk again since she won't get past it? These people like the one in Canada, just listen to what he has to say, you can do that you know that right? This is why I hate democracy so much, even someone who can't read can vote, let that sink in. I don't tell nerds how to win at their favorite videogame, I would wager almost all people don't do that. The beauty of this all is no one will walk up to me on the street and argue with me if Mahmoud Ahmadinejad should be president again, I find these people on the internet, I'm responsible for those arguments. I'm not going to get my way and I definitely am in no way responsible for who gets elected. If I were a real jerk, I could vote in revenge and vote for the candidates who are bad for America. It reflects a countries education system, morals, workforce, and, standard of living of who gets elected; again I am in no way responsible for it in a country where 7% cannot locate America on a world map and the highest percent of prison population in the world. The day I realized nothing here was my fault was the day I could laugh it off; it's not funny that someone would allow that. They do all of this stuff in hiding, nobody wants dumb people in a country trust me Brazil must suck. This country really has everything you name it, we have LA, Hawaii, and we have Kansas. We have people who are very polite and those who are obnoxious. It amazes me that a country like this can exist; it only works because you can live in any town or city you want. Can you even run a place like this with people so different from one another? Our military would suck if we were ever invaded. It's nothing like Japan and I don't say that as a way to look down on America, I just don't think people can imagine such a country. I appreciate how it makes you tougher in life and I love the fact that they gave me a car here to drive. I give the American people a good overall rating, if the whole country were like LA I would have to leave. I would say 75% of people here get it but I don't know demographics here and if the poor immigrants get it even if I don't like how they blast their music all day. We have so much going for us where we are not biased for wars, we want to do the right thing; I would leave America if they beat me up for speaking against a war like they would in Lithuania which I find unforgiveable. Because this country is so different from the rest of the world, I accept that there will never be a unity movement of 90% of the country; this is nothing like the 60s without coming off as complaining.

Am I the only one who accepts others for who they are? Can't we just accept that people are different? I can tell when someone has behavior that is alarming and I avoid them. I'm not going to question someone if they watch basketball games every night or if they vote a certain way. I like the person for their character, why would I be against them? I didn't even know how people voted until I was 19 and I had liked most people before then. If they had voted a certain way I would just assume that that they were misguided, now I know that they want to increase their salary or they want the country run their way, both of which I'm fine with. If I can talk to a guy who passionate about reading about the Queens of England, I can talk to anyone I choose. I value his opinion, politics ruin potential friends.

How can you tell that these wars are forced? No country at any point in history would let you succeed, that makes the Catholic Church innocent, people don't think in real terms, they just see it as the Pope at the time abusing his will. After all, it had nothing to do with religious freedom; it was ok as long as your country obeyed his orders, other countries were finally getting colonies and didn't want to be told what to do because they thought they knew better. The Holy Roman Empire had recognized other religious groups such as Lutheranism. There won't be any piece of evidence where the Pope said "no religious freedom" that's what Protestant was, protesting against the Pope. Every country would send in troops. Some outside threat was responsible for the Yugoslavian breakup, they let it happen. The Soviet Union meanwhile had failed (which the US government had tried to prevent), there is a big difference between a country failing and the US government making it fail.

The challenge is doing what is right, not serving others this is your credibility after all. You can always hold your head up high because your policies are helping others. Thankfully I will never hold office here, far too much work to convince others that I know what I'm doing.

The goal of debate is to prove that I am right in what I'm promoting. It is not to beat the other guy like Ali did. You have to coordinate your facts and provide reasonable answers to what the opposition brings, you have to know when you to say "see I know you are wrong" in a polite manner. If you don't know what the reference is, always say "I don't know the answer to this question." You have watched CNN so you know that all of it is messed up and they don't even give both sides enough time to talk. We are teaching the young adults way wrong to where you look for things to bash the other candidate with. If I were to make a case for Donald Trump, I would have to show why he is better than Hillary Clinton. We can be mature about this. This is to better you, not to go back and forth because this will help with your presentation, low blows on the other person is not allowed. You can say "Islam is a religion of peace" because you really believe it.

Capitalism is not a worthy cause to spend days talking about, people are not dying because we don't have Capitalism in America. How come these Atheists don't see past it? If they read about Gaza would they really say "no Capitalism must go first" I would just be shocked because many Atheists fall under "wanting to do good" or "don't care about others" categories, they would not really mean what they had just said. I'm not even mocking them; I would really want to know how they made this error right infront of them for not realizing "what if your family members died in this conflict?" How do they not put resolving Gaza first in the name of Atheism? That would be huge for Atheism if they stuck together, protested and demanded it to be fixed it but that's not what I'm saying in the previous sentence, what I meant was don't they put others dying above all else by instinct? That's why Atheism is so dangerous, we don't know what their morals are, they could just be "fighting injustice" rather than realizing the damage they are doing and will not give up the system they use. The Soviet Union made sure not to allow a mistake and kill everyone who opposed them which is impossible. My concern is that they would just get angrier if it wasn't working the way they had hoped for. The enemy might give these people a country in the future to work with just to mess with them, allow them to pick their own allies, and let it fail. I really think we can take these people down in a debate and I know many of them look for trouble. I know that when you lose 12-1 soldiers in a war that is not worth fighting, what these people are doing is a mistake that I would make also at age 18, they don't know how to react how do people not see what is going on here?! The enemy is so smart, they play the good guy on behalf of the people of Gaza by saying that we are against Hamas having public executions and child soldiers trained, people abroad want to see Hamas gone but they don't admit it. I don't condemn the people of Yemen for training their kid to fight, they feel they have to win, Wikipedia can't mess with me.

That's why Assad keeps addressing the photos of kids being killed, I may believe him or at least understand that this stuff happens, but the majority here don't stop and think that it is possible, how I have NO CLUE! Hey Bashar, why don't you show pictures of how many kids have been made orphans as a result of the war? Nobody in the West cheers for that. The part that people don't pick up on is that he is doing everything he can to prevent these events from happening; your governments are not helping him end it, he bears no responsibility there is no command to kill innocents. If someone was only mad about the death toll, again are you going to be mad at Assad for taking his country back from mostly foreign fighters? I think I get it now because the FSA only gets around 10% of the vote, that's nowhere near enough to succeed I don't blame him for saying "no." The FSA has failed so bad that they hardly even exist, if I were fighting for them I think I would be smart enough to say "I'm done" because than you will fall to someone else Saudi Arabia will not guarantee you anything but no one asked their FSA leaders what they will get from Saudi Arabia when they win maybe because someone fighting with you would respond and say "shut up! Do you want us to lose?" If they did guarantee the FSA anything, it would be a big war where you could end out dying because of it and you have to trust that Turkey won't invade and betray you. That's why I would tell these fighters to just go live in Turkey. This is how I know Bashar is telling the truth, Saudi Arabia could have stepped in during the 2011 protests and they would have been greeted as liberators, it would look wrong if they intervene now because Syrians trust Assad and not the West. It would have been bad for Saudi Arabia if they committed genocide against people who didn't want a new government, the Syrians would go on to tell other people and the Saud's would never be trusted again. The Syrians know what they are doing; they don't want their country to turn into Iraq even if that means high unemployment for the next ten years. Qatar had offered people $50,000 to defect from the Syrian government; that is suspicious as to why you would have to pay me that much.

Also, you don't do a ceasefire with people who want to kill you when they have a far edge on you but I don't think they picked up on that one I know I would never allow it to happen. I know these people have functioning brains because they will not let US troops train their soldiers, they got that part right allowing US troops to know your military tactics would be so stupid words can't do it justice when you have no reason to trust them. You only do a ceasefire if it is beneficial they know it's not worth killing Assad and then fighting these people right afterwards that would mean they are set on dying in this war for the FSA which would mean the slogan they use is wrong because FSA doesn't say "die and lose" unless if I didn't look far enough to find out what their cause was then my bad. This is why I know it barely exists because these people keep losing and they lose members to Al Nusra Front left and right. Assad doesn't need to tell them to put down their arms, I can help tell them what is going on here because they won't listen to him so they have to think that if Al Nusra Front won and began bombing the West (as they have endorsed and praised) then what will Syria become? They know Americans will not let an attack at home seriously how don't they see it? See I can pick up on it because in 20 years people in the West will not care which side won or lost a war in the Middle East. This is just like the breakup of Yugoslavia, no one except me gets mad at NATO for intervening, this is just one of their tactics. It gets even worse because if the school teachers teach that NATO or in this case the US government was responsible for Syria being wrecked, there will be extremists who will bomb Western countries, it has happened before. Also, I want you to really think about this reader- if the US government overthrew Saddam who had 98% of the vote, Assad is their target and he is saying to the public "why don't the Kurds go try to convince others who to vote for" maybe just maybe he is telling you the truth. Always, always, always these people are labeled as dictators by the media in America I would know what a dictator is I am one! If not for an International Community I would not let part of the country leave my Confederacy I created if they didn't do exactly what I had expected of them even then they would find a way to blame me if their state failed. Assad has few endorsements in the Middle East from his neighbors which I know upsets him because he doesn't like what is going on here; it looks bad for the Syrians. This stuff really makes you think! Think about what you would say if you were in this scenario!!!

I've always thought of leaders to be the best of the best, not the most marketable (again, another failed concept this is a country not a corporation) think of Putin, he thinks it's funny people in the West study him it's for a reason they want someone who they view as tough.

What would you do in this scenario? That is a question that you must answer to become wiser. If it is 9-1 over something obvious, don't worry about it but if it is split than you have to make the case. Only if you are the 1 person than you care, we aren't here to convince that 1 person that the 9 of us must explain this to you, we will do what the 9 wants until it fails, you in the meantime get to know that you are right. We don't have to make the case for that one person for them, they just have to explain why they are that one person and leave it at that so we can learn why they are that one person. You want to become a better soldier; this is what you do. You were always the one who always wanted to make your case. You have eyes; you can see a 25-year-old in the Syrian War who is just starting to be a leader commanding orders and you listen to him this is important. It makes sense now why the US government spends 3 hours a day on Skype with FSA fighters, they want them to learn, it has nothing to do with informing them! I tell you this because at least one of these girls giving orders is very attractive and tells the FSA fighter that she "loves" him in hopes of getting him to pay attention, I will bet money on it. 3 hours a day is a lot to spend with a fighter you know that, to me it is direct murder of pro Syrians; the US government really wants to win. Usually, I would think of giving arms and some orders, the Syrian government is fighting the US government here.

Mohammad bin Salman doesn't get that people don't like him. If there are any morals in you, no one supports someone who cuts off food supplies for people in Yemen. He acts like Saudi Arabia is top class and has a bright future except it doesn't, it will always have the same morons running it who don't put any thought into anything. If someone told him the truth he'd probably start breaking down that people in America don't like him anyways and that Saudi Arabia has no credibility. If that isn't bad enough, he was installed by the British so he doesn't really have an identity, his people can't relate to him because they are attached to "Islam", they don't care nor are they engaged in any way. I don't think they would celebrate or be upset at who is in office. He wants better for people who don't care and want things their way. This isn't something to celebrate or take pride in and then he mentions the military.....but whose military? People enlist for money, benefits, or status. What makes this so sad too is Mohammad keeps meeting with American officials when we know America supports Israel which would seem so sketchy given that Palestinians and Muslims do not support America in any way so whose side is he on? The country lacks any identity what so ever and they also pervert Islam, let that sink in. If this is a devoutly religious country and the capital of the world for religion, why do they keep investing in military and wanting to get involved in wars with Iran? Does that make sense? Wouldn't Saudi Arabia strive for peace? They also have a truly sick human named Adel al-Jubeir running their foreign relations. There is bound to be a flaw in every single one of these people and they try to be relatable, here's a guy that is true scum, Allah will tell him that. Your everyday catholic or freemason is probably a good person but these people are beyond flawed, it is either a. or b. You either like Mohammad bin Salam or Saddam Hussein, the list goes on forever. There's no way of making sense of their religious beliefs. There may be one or two moralists in freemasonry at the top; does it matter at that point? I wouldn't be surprised if I found one or two people who were good relatable people but that happens to be the ultra minority see what I'm getting at? Finally, they need an enemy or else how could America get away with having camps in Iraq for an extended date? Without Ansar-al Sharia there is no striking in Yemen, their goal is to destroy what the Yemenis had created.
